To the Propreseroes on the River Tweed, and Rivers running into it.

The Paperierous on the River Tween, and River; running into it.

The very rapid decrease in the number of Salmon taken in the Tweed for some years path, has been a most alarming consideration. The enale of that decrease is, in a great measure, owing to a shaneful remission in executing the acts of Parliament, pariest some time since, for regulating and improving the fisheries in the Tweed. For two seasons, there have been many meetings of the principal Propietars, to take some measures for procuring an exact observance of these shapes. They have associated for that purpose, and everything that could be devised has been adopted, they sharter themselves, with great effect, though not so complete as their interest, requires. The stilling Salmon in close time, and the driftuction of the Salmon say, are the parts of the strates of the most material consequence. There have here the strongest and most obliging allowances given by the Sheritis of different countries, and many of the spatices of Pearer, to do all in their power to enforce, for the time to offence, a rigid execution of these clauses. The consequences of such attention will from the felt, and, it is hoped, will obve particular fatisfaction to every person who has had a share in convenience of such attention will from the felt, and, it is hoped, will obve particular fatisfaction to every person who has had a share in convenience of such attention will from the felt, and, it is hoped, will obve particular fatisfaction to every person who has had a share in convenience of such attention, the following proposal was made toyla say justified by the Proprietor, as look as it was income the such as such as a such so turned to the Proprietor, as look as it was income in the such as a season of the tweed to the such as such as further to muta, then the one end of the Tweed to the subter the such as such as further to muta, then the such as the such as the such as the such as as a such as further to muta.

fautes, hould be difmitled by the Proprietor, as look as it was in his power to to do." His power to to do."
Was this feheme purfaced, from the one end of the Tweed to the other, it would go further to put a flop to the practices complained of, than any other expedient that could be fuggefled; and the fame is arriedly recommended to the most ferious attention of every. Proprietor on the Tweed, and rivers rinhuling lipto it. When the great injury that the negligence, hitherto culturary, in permitting the close-time fishing, the very unwholefame statute of salmone at that feafon, and the sery immaterial advantage that arises from such a practice, are properly confidered, together with the fair proceedings of the Association in enforcing an equal regard to every part of the statutes, there is great reason to think that the plan will be generally adopted. The cedimelion of the young fry is so-utterly disparceful, and so obviously injurious to the property of every individual, from the Tweed-months to his fearbe, that it is unnecessary to fay any thing upon its ruinous state.

Capp of a letter from Sen Hunn Seron, Bart. Collector of the Cassons at Borrowstownsofs, to Mr Jona Buchan, writer to the figuret.

Billiance, Nov. 19. 1783.

SIR.

The officers of the Cultoms at this Portol Borrowstownness, were extremly forry, that your conveniency when lately there, did not suit with their request of your taking the trouble to come to that Costont-house, in order that they might have had an opportunity from their books and otherwise, to have convinced you of the lojutice which had been done them by some late publications, by memorials to the Hon. Board of Cultoms, advertisements to the people of Scotland, &c.

I thusfore, for the information of your contituents, who lunderstand are to meet this day in consequence of these publications, beg leave to offer to their consideration, some remarks, drawn up in a more halfy manner than I could have wished, thogh at the same time such as the gentlemen may depend upon as facts.

offer to their confideration, some remarks, drawn up in a more hally manner than I could have withed, thogh at the same time such as the gentlemen may depend upon as safets.

First. That no see whatever has been raised during my time as Collector, or during that of my predecessor, which includes a space of between the analysis of the same time that of my predecessor, which includes a space of between the same that the same time the district of Borrowsho-mass, where there are numberies passage boats crossing from one-side of the Forth to the other, at all hours of the day and night, all goods whatsever, wool alone excepted, are curried without any Custom-house dispatch or see.

Thirdly, That the coal trade in place of being carried on in hoats of eight or ten tons burden, as has been instructed to the public, is upon an avarage in vessels of seventy tons and upwards, that the smallest vessel in the coal trade at present in the district of Borrowshoonees, is of twenty-eight tons burden, and of that size there are very few, pechaps not three.

Fourthly, That as the empluments of the collectorship, from the best information, was forty, years ago not less than betwise three and four hundred a-year, I have great reason to think that the sees upon the whole were much higher than they are at present, the trade being now quasiruple when it was at that time, whill the emoluments have not increased in proportion. And, Lash That I have observed a tetter from Gramend, in the Edinburgh Advertises of the rath int. Signed A. B, restelling very pointedly on the officers at Borrowshouners, which, though I cannot take upon me to answer with precision until I return to the port and examine the book, yet I think I may senture till then to allow your constituents, that the one half of that lester has no foundation in truth.

I have now only to beg that you will be so good at to read this letter dation in truth.

I have now only to beg that you will be fo good as to read this letter to the meeting, and am,

Sir, &c.

SIR,

SIR HENRY SETON, the Collector at this port, being called away upon business which would not admit of delay, we think it incumbent on us, to fignify to you, as agent for the Noblemen and Gentlemen who met at Edinburgh on the 19th instant.—That the Collector laid before us the letter he wrote, you of that date, for the information of the Meetings, and that the facts affected therein are consistent with our thousedget. We have indeed heard, that it has been alledged, that the Gollector's emolumients being forty years ago so high as between the and sown bundred asyean; proceedial from a precarient Tedesco trade at that period; but, this the Collector knew of, and rather gave too great an allowance for, as the fees were at that particular time, from the best authority, 500 L. We have likewise heard, that it has been affected, that there were more vessels of 28 tons burden in the district of Borrowstounness than he had represented, which was certainly a mistake, unless they had a right to include some of the Laith creeks into our district. We likewise have to acquaint you, that upon examination of the books here and at Leith, in respect to the anonymous letter from Cramoud, published in the Edinburgh Advertise of 14th instant, there appears in the course of the last 24 months, seventeen vessels cleared by cocket at this Custom-house, from 8t David's Castle, for Leith, of which Gamond is a track; but that by the book at Leith was ace of these vessels discharged at Cramond.—Sixtern of the feyenteen resules having unloaded in Leith berbour, and the 17th was imposed to have gone to England; so that if the letter-writer really did import coals at Cramond, it must have ficen by permit for some creek in this district; therefore, he only sent of the Collector and Comptroller at Borrowstounacts. L. 0 1 for The Collector and Comptroller at Borrowstounacts.

In all at Borrow frounness,

Total fees,

A complaint fomething fimilar was made lately by Mr. George Chalmers, to same gentlemen of the Custom-house at Edinburgh.—He faid, that he and his sons were greatly oppressed by the heavy fees at Borrow-stounness; that in the course of the last two years, they had upon a small coal-bark, (N. B. She is between 30 and 40 tuns burden) paid from 35-l. to 40 l. of sees. This allegation soon reached has. We knew his shoop, and immediately examined the books for two years back, and found, that during that time, they had loaded 41 sargoes; that 40 of them had cleared by permit for Queensferry; but that the whole 41 vessels discharged at Leith; as appeared by their returns:—That the fees at Borrowstounaess upon the abave 41 cargoes, amounted in all to 6.1. 8 s. 45 d. in place of betwint 35 l. and 40 l.—At Leith, the 42 cargoes paid 3 l. 1s. 6 d.

We now conclude with requesting, that you will say this before the cargoes paid 3.1. 1.6.6d.

We now conclude with requelling, that you will lay this before the Committee and Meeting, and affine them that we are ready to give them every information in our power relative to the trade and efter at this continuous of any person of port, and that our books are open for the inspection of any periode character whom they shall clust to find here for that purpose.

We are, S I R.

Your most obedient humble fervants,

EDINBURGH CIRCULATING LIBRARY.

The only material difference between this Edition and the last, is, the addition of a third appendix, containing the new books and pamphlets published in 1783; which, to lave expense to sinch as are directly possessing the mode of adding an appendix annually has been continued, in preference to an arrangement of the New Books under their respectives classes; for, notwithstanding the advanced price of the Caulogue, it is not the intention of the publisher to profit by its false, but only to indeputify himself.

From a view of this and the two former Appendixes, it will be found, that the publisher has not orbitted a single book or pamphlet, of any fort of consequence, that has been published in Britain for these three years past; and likewise, that novels, the ordinary provision of a circulating library, forms but an extremely small part of his plan, and not a twentieth part of the sum paid annually for new publications. This has takes the liberty to press upon the attention of every person of taste and intelligence, who wishes, at A Satall EXERNET, to be acquainted with what is going on in the literary world—And, while he acknowledges and regrets the trequent occasions he has for indulgence from his Subscribers, he hopes his unremitting endeavours to accommodate them, as far at lies in his power, or is possible from the nature of the business, will justify him for thus folliciting with considence a continuance of their patronage and encouragement.

The following, he presumes, will be considered as no small improve-har as use to me power as with confidence a continuance of their patronage and encouragement.

The following, he prefumes, will be confidered as no small improvement upon his plan; panticularly by such as have a taste for the elegant and admired art of Drawing; He proposes to keep always a considerable number of choice Prints, by the best masters, for the purpose of lending, in the same manner as books. They will consist entirely of such as are proper for copying; as, Landscape, Heads, Academical Figures, the best prints from Antique Statues, Historically &c. And as no catalogue of them can be made out with accuracy or precision, the whole will constantly be exhibited in a particular apartment of the Library, where it will be necessary for Subscribers to come, when they want to await themselves of this privilege.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

After the petition brought into the House of Commons by Sir Henry Fletcher had been read, as micromond in our last, Mr Fox hastily rose up and faid, That it was by no mearn his wish to involve the House in any debate concerning the business to which that petition alluded. He only meant to rectify a military which he underliked. a miltake, which he understood, from the convertation of levea militake, which he understood, from the convertation of leveral members near him, prevailed very generally in the House and elsewhere, namely, his affertion respecting the fum in which the East India Company are in arrears. He did not deny that he said, the Company awed eight millions sterling, but he did not say that they owed that sum without possessing any sund by which some part of it might be liquidated. If Gentlemen befieved that to have been either faid or imagined by him, he doeinly difavowed both. Mr Fox appeared to be embarrafted. Mr W. Pitt observed, with a good deal of warmth and vehemence, that He was one of those Gentlemen who had been so.

weak as to believe, that the Honourable Gentleman both imagined and faid, that the Company owed EIGHT MILLIONS, without having any resources to which they might trust for relief. He did believe it, and many other Gentlemen believed it, and they had good reason so to do, when they had heard it proclaimed with a loud voice, on such an occasion, and by such a person, on the day in which the infamous bill, now gending in Parliament, was introduced in that House, by one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State. There could be nothing more certain, in his apprehension, than that the affertion had been made, though now the Honourable Secretary did not hesitate boldly to disavow it. But that was like many other clauses in the bill, liable to be objected to, and resuted, because it was not founded in truth. He understood that the Directors of the Company's officers were arranging their papers, and that they meant to offer to lay them before Parliament, and to that they meant to offer to lay them before Parliament, and to convince the world that they were not by any means to deeply involved as it had been thought proper to represent them; And he entertained not a doubt but they would be able to accomplish their purpose. It was thus, he observed, that the Homourable sabricator of the India bill attempted to delude the members of that House, and to promote his iniquitous purposes, by framing falschoods, and then holding them up as just grounds for him to proceed upon. He shewed only one side of the object, the unfavourable side, too; and, by his eloquence and his affurance, endeavoured to intimidate men from trusting and his affurance, endeavoured to intimidate men from trufting to their fenses. But he hoped there was no friend to his country that would be so easily missed. He hoped all honest men would unite to counteract a bill which was supported by such nosubstantial reasons, that the mover of it was obliged to rebrounce them before it had made half its way through the House. Here, he added, we have an explanation of that very weighty motive for propoling this unaccountable fyftem to our confideration, which the Honourable Secretary was pleafed to term needity. He was under a needity of forming a new code for India, because that country was in a state of anarchy, and because the Company were so deeply involved, involved in a-fun-of eight millions flerling ! and unable to hold out longer, without falling into a flate of bankruptcy;—a dreadful flate to be fure! but which existed no where but in the heads of a fet of men who withed to establish their own power, by robbing the Company of what the most facred laws had conferred up-

The petition of the Proprietors, Mr Pitt understood to fignify these two, things, that they should be openly examined, and convinced by what illegal conduct of theirs they were to be degraded from offices in which Parliament itself had placed them; nd that the fifuation of their affairs should be, fully and candidly examined, that an account, formewhat confissent with aruth, might be obtained. These, he thought, were reasonable requelts, and such as ought to be complied with by Ministers, unless they dreaded that the result would tend to expose the infamy and injustice of their unprecedented proceedings. He was fully convinced, from what he had heard, that the refult would fall heavy upon the bill, should an enquiry be permitted; he certainly would exert his abilities to uncover the truth, or, what was the very fame thing, in the instance before them, the baseness of the Miaistry. The Right Hon. mover of the bill, he continued, had undertaken to deceive the House in a very new way, by the affertion of things which he could not hold up his face to prove, and by reprefenting others in a light in which his greatest ingenuity could not prevent them from the view of difference unit. Both his motives and his schemes were seen through, and it was in vain for him to pretend to superfied the interposition of falutary regulations, by a radical system of laws founded in injustice, fraud, and despotism.

Mr. Fox faid very coolly, that he thought the present stage of the before the constructions of the last stage.

of the business a very improper one for altercation. He had no doubt of being able to answer every objection that could be thrown out against the bill when it should come to be discussed, at the time the House had appointed for that purpose. He should only trouble the House, he said, with one word, which was, that he did not think it at all becoming the Hon. Gen. tleman, who had the other day for vehemently deprecated palliatives and half digefled lystems, to talk so loudly in favour of falutary regulations.

Mr Pitt alledged a few things in his behalf. He faid, that he had formerly urged the necessity of amending the laws of India, and he still faid that that was requifite, provided it was really amending them.

Mr Burke faid, that Mr Pitt had talked very big of falutary ulations, and laws founded in fraud and despotifm, and suchlike thing;; for his part, he was amufed with the found of the words, but that was all. To him they conveyed no meaning; and, left the diffinction and use that had been made of them made no impression on him, the Hon. Gentleman had pledged himself to oppose the progress of the bill. He will do so, no doubt; but we don't mind his threats; they may make an impression on the minds of boys, but with men they were nothing at all. Mr Barke faid, that he himself knew as well as any man, perhaps, the state of the Company's affairs; but he could not fay within a great fum, indeed, what the amount of the Company's debts might be. With regard to his Hon. Friend's allegations, respecting the eight millions, he had as good an opportunity as any body to hear his sentiments, and he honestly declared that he always understood him not to have flated that fum as an absolute debt. He was fure he did not mean it; and if he had been milunderstood, it could not now be helped.

Mr T. Pitt adverting to a part of Mr Burke's speech; faid, that his Hon. Friend (Mr W. Pitt) never said that he had been in possession of any of the Company's papers; but only, that he had been informed, that their affairs were in a much better train than they were represented to be in. He had, he faid, taken notice of the propriety of admitting salutary regulations, rather than hazarding new experiments, e.c.

As Mr Fox's mistake, voluntary or involuntary, has made a great noise, it was proper to detail the above at length.

Read a second time, and committed for the morrow, the

Mr Fox brought in his fecond bill relative to India; entitled a bill for the better regulation of the affairs of the East India Company, the Breviate of which was read to the Speaker.

Sir Edward Affer faid, he would not oppose the bill then;

but he thought Gentlemen ought to proceed with caution in measure, by which so much influence would be thrown into the hands of the Crown. A bill of infinitely less moment, and which gave infinitely less influence, had been opposed by some of the first and belt men in this country, because it tended to increase, though in a small degree, the influence of the Crowu and its Ministers; if the measure, therefore, should be adopted, which would put Ministry in possession of a boundless extent of Patronage, and which in its consequences, might threaten the liberties and conflitution of this country, Gentlemen would find it necessary to come again to vote, "That the influence of the Crown has increased, is increasing, and ought to be di-minished." He was ready to allow, that, from the present state of the Company's affairs, some regulations were necessary; and perhaps, more to since the late news. He was ready also to allow, that a Company of Merchants were not qualified to govern large territorial possessions; but it would still be right to be on one's guard, lest the measures proposed should prove inous to the liberry of this country.

Mr Fow faid the Hon. Baronet's remarks were pointed, not against the bill then under consideration, but against the other which he had the honour to present a few days before; when that flould become the subject of debate, he would endeavour to defend it against the several objections that should be urged against it. With respect to the influence it would give the crown, it was the duty of its opposers to show that it was unnecessary, and that influence, and not any other circumstance, was the object. He was glad, however, to hear the Hon. Baroner fay he felt the necessity of making some regulations, and that a company of merchants were not fit to govern a large tract of territorial possessions. As to the bill now before the House, the principle of it was clearly unexceptionable in point of influence; for fo far was k from giving influence, that it went particularly to guard against it. He presumed, therefore, there would be no apposition to the fending of it to a committee, as whatever objections might arife, they must, in his opinion, be to the provisions, and not to the bill itself. He was not so vain as to suppose that he could frame a bill which embraced to many objects, that should not be liable to objections; it would be, therefore, for the wisdom of the committee to make such alterations as they should judge necessary.

Sir Edward Affley begged pardon of the House for having confounded the two different bills. His objections, he owned, were to the bill which was not then before the House.

Mr W. Pitt faid, it was impolible to form a judgement of a bill of fuch a length, from hearing it read; but fo far as he could judge, the principle of it did not strike him, as being afimilar to that of the first bill; at present, therefore, faw no objection to its going to a committee: It was not to be expected, however, that he should pledge himself to support it, till he should have read the whole of the bill.

Mr Arden faid the bill mentioned in various places the Commissioners to whom the Company's affairs were to be entrusted, this showed that it depended upon another bill; and would; therefore, be nugatory and abfurd, if the other should not pass.

Mr Fox replied, that, be the fate of the other bill what it regulations was admitted on all hands; and let who might be entrusted with the management of the Company's affairs, these regulations would be necessary; he wished therefore that the bill might be gone through as foon as possible; or even pas-fed before the other bill; and that care might be taken in the committee to infert a clause, which should declare (let the guvertiment of the Company be in whom it might) the powers verticed in them by this bill would not be depending upon any other; but be complete though the other should be lott .- Mr Pitt nedded approbation. An order was then made that the bill be printed, and read a second time on Tuesday.

Lord John Cavendish brought up a bill for explaining Receipt Tax act, and for indemnifying from the penalties in-curred under it. This bill having been read by the Speaker, Lord Mahon faid he thould have no objection to it, if in the indemnifying clause the noble Lord would consent to admit after the words " whereas doubts have arisen, &c." that in fact no penalties had been incurred under the former act. His Lordfhip was answered in a low voice across the House, that this might be fur matter for the consideration of the Committee, when the bill should be before it.

Mr Arden, withing to defend the opinion he had formerly given on the subject, went into a long detail of quotations from all the Stamp acts down from William and Mary to the prefent day. He couclided with observing, that in the manner the present bill was worded, it would leave the doubts it was brought in to explain in the same situation as before.

Lord John Cavendish replied, that what the learned gentleman had faid might be true: He was a much better judge of professional matters than he was; he should therefore hope for his affistance in the Committee, to word it so that it might meet the object proposed. Perhaps the obscurity might be from this circumstance, that there were too few words in the bill; this was probably the case, as the learned gentleman contended, that though a clause in the act now in force said that all Matters and Things contained in former acts relative to Stamps should be adopted in that, still no penalty should be incurred under this clause, as the word Penalty was not expressed in it, or the import of the word conveyed under the general terms, all Matters and Things. If the bill was faulty in not having a fufficient number of words, this was fomewhat extraordinary, as it came from the hands of gentlemen of the learned profession who in general are not over sparing of words.

Mr Cole said, that the tax of itself was greatly disliked in the trading town (Nottingham) he had the honour to reprefent, there not being a fingle shopkeeper who did not execute it. He was aware that no man ought to move for the repeal of a tax, who was not prepared with another to replace it: part, he was prepared with one or two taxes, which he was fure would be found productive, without Ling burdenfome; and therefore was ready to communicate them to the noble Lord, if he would honour him with a conference on the fubject. An order was made then for the fecond reading of the EDINBUR'GH. Extract of a letter from London, Nov. 27. HOUSE or COMMONS.

"As soon as the Speaker took the Chair,
"Lord North rose and informed the House, that in consequence of some bills that passed last sessions of Parliament respecting Ireland, it became necessary that something should be some respecting the Post Office. Heretofore the Irish Office was considered as a branch of the English. He proposed to more for leave to bring in a bill for their separation, and that vas considered as a branch of the English. He proposed to nove for leave to bring in a bill for their separation, and that each Office should receive the revenues in proportion to the mouble and expence they were at. As England was at the expence incarred for the conveyance of letters cross St George's Channel, he meant the English Post Office to receive the postage of all setters to Ireland, and that the Irish Post Office should receive a compensation for distributing them: That no letters should pass free to or from Ireland, except those to the Ministers, as at present; That news-papers and votes of Parliament should pass on payment of a peony each packet.—His Lordship stated a sew other circumstances relative to the packets, and concluded with moving for leave to bring in his bill.

EAST INDIA AFFAIRS.

"The second reading of Mr Fox's bill, for the better regulation of East India affairs, standing as the order of the day, a rey early and full attendance of the members was given, and so great was the curiosity of the public on the occasion, that before the hour of one o'clock, the gallery was crowded with transpers, who had come down several hours before in order to pin admittance, and the lobby and avenues of the House formpletely choaked up as to render it a matter of extreme difficulty for a great number of peace officers, whose assisted had been called in for the purpose, to make way for the members as they came to the House.

"About half after three o'clock, Mr Secretary Fox came down, followed by Lord North, who still appeared very much bilitical nature.

"About half after three o'clock, Mr Secretary Fox came down, followed by Lord North, who still appeared very much bilitical nature.

"The Sherisso of London attended at the bar, and deliver-maisposed, and whose illness many people.

"The Sherists of London attended at the bar, and deliverd a petition to the House against the regulating bill. The petion was received and read. Ordered to lie on the table.

"Mr Fox moved for certain papers respecting the state of the company; which papers were immediately brought up by the becretary to the Treasury.

"Land Mabon.—It is not my intention to oppose any motion for manera that tend to throw a further light upon the subtion for manera that tend to throw a further light upon the sub-

son for papers that tend to throw a further light upon the sub-set of this day's debate, but I cannot help thinking the con-set of Ministers exceedingly indecent in moving before for apers that are said to be necessary to the investigation of the Company's affairs.

"Mr Fox faid, the papers he moved for were not volumibus. He wished as much as any man to have the business ly examined into; but as he found that it was intended to of his bill on the ground of the flourishing state of the ompany's affairs, he thought it his duty to lay before the very information he had to the contrary.

"Mr Fox and Sir James Lowther riling at the lame time, the ale was in an uproar, until Sir James declared he role to oder, this procured filence.

"Sir James then moved to have the papers read that were tored and produced to the House by the Council.

The Speaker lettled the point of order against the motion. "Shortly after this, the order of the day was called for, ad the petitions of the Court of Proprietors, and the Court of bredors of the East India Company, against the bills pend-Counsel, were severally read, and Counsel was ordered to e Bar accordingly.

"Mr Rous and Dallas appeared in behalf of the Court of opictors. Mr Rous spoke for about an hour and a half, and Mr Dallas followed him in a speech of much elegance and great length. The general drift of their argument was, to show the illegality of the principal of Mr Fon's bull, and the dangerous tendency it would have if passed into a law, which they called upon the House in the most pointed and animated terms to prevent, contending that the East India Company were not in a state of insolvency, but that they would, after discharging every just and legal demand upon them, have retraining in their hands a surplus of near sour millions steeling. To prove which, Mr Nichols, Accountant-General, and Mr Annay Auditor General of the East India Company, were severally called in and examined, both by the Counsel and House.

"Mc Hardinge and Mr Plummer, Counsel for the Court of Directors, were then called in, and being respectively heard, followed the before mentioned Gentlemen in a most eloquent and masterly manner, also against the principle of the bill, and the invasion it threatened of the rights and property of the very respectable and opulent body they had the honour of being concerned for.

respectable and opulent body they had the honour of being concerned for.

 Mr Fox then stood up, and took notice of the industry with which his plan had been misrepresented to the public: That affertions had been attributed to him which he never tad advanced: Thus the state of the Company's debts and credits had been delivered to the House by the Court of Proprietors, by which it was made appear, that his statement of their affairs was founded in error; and that the Company was not in a runnous condition. Mr Fox said, he meant to impeach the account that lay upon the table to the amount of twelve millions. To do this, it was necessary for him to examine every article. He then proceeded to an examination of every article; and pro-To do this, it was necessary for him to examine every article. He then proceeded to an examination of every article; and proved to demonstration, that they had taken credit for near the sum he mentioned, which they had no right so do; and that it was calculated to deceive Parliament and the Public. Mr Fox defended his bill in a speech of three hours, replete with fact and argument. It has been said, says he, that necessary is the plea of tyrants, it was also the plea of free ment. It was necessary that brought about the revolution, and conveyed the inheritance, contrary to the eliablished laws of the land. He did not blame gentlemen for their caption in examining every measure that tended to increase the influence of the Crown: But, he concluded, that if his bill increased influence, it also increases. fore that tended to increase the influence of the Crown: But, he concluded, that if his bill increased influence, it also increased the responsibility of Ministers. Did gentlemen in agive Ministers had no influence in the appointments in India? They certainly had; and it was well known they had; and be thought it proper they should; but the Courtof Directors shoot between them and responsibility. He was really to build his reputation on the bill, let its fate be what it may; and if the bill should be thrown out, he boldly declared, that he thought the Treasury competent to issue an extent against them for the debt due to the revenue. Mr Fox denied that they had bought their Charter, or that any such agreement had been made. He took notice of the late melancholy accounts from India; said it had arisen from a contention for plunder among the Officers.

The Hon. Mr W. Pite followed Mr Fox with his usual ability, and at the time of writing this, had been up for pear an hour and a half. A great number of members are expected to speak, and it is a matter of doubt, whether the Houle will rise before four or five o'clock in the morning.

to speak, and it is a matter of clott, waether the Houte will rife before four or five o'clock in the norming.

"The general opinion is, the question will be carried on a division, but that the ministry will be hard run.

"Mr Dundas, Mr Pitt, Mr Grenville, Mr Jenkinson, and several other members in opposition, were taking notes of Mr Fox's speech. Mr Dundas, the late Lord Advocate, and Mr

William Pitt, were feating next each other.
